... Another user reports that the malware successfully infected their machine. Source: If you are a victim of USBPorts.Win32.PTS.Noproy.EesaVtwin.C2HDF.xxxx, the easiest way to remove it is to download the following anti-virus product: PCScan by Trend Micro For more information about this virus, use the following link. ... The next day, the NHS issued an alert claiming that the virus comes in the form of a file with the innocuous name of iup. Source: The NHS even linked to the alleged file but it was never posted on the NHS site. In order to remove the malware, I downloaded and installed the BitDefender

Antivirus. After it was completed, I checked my computer and found that it was already clean. Source: This is based on some research, so any feedback is welcome. ... How the virus works ... The installer

Will you be good to contact me by e-mail if you discover further news about this issue. Hoping you will help me solve it quickly. Thanks in advance and please reply! A: I had the same problem and here is the solution that I've found. Thats solved! After some hours of watching the internet, I discovered a firmware of the tuner (in russian). I have many other question about this tuner and about the maker of this tuner. I hope that you have the opportunity to read it and then answer me :) I'm still getting used to the flatbed scanner. You get a whole roll of film in one go and can scan it at a rate of four pages per minute. Previously we had to stick the whole film in a plastic sleeve and feed it through the scanner one section at a time. Sometimes the scanner jammed and had to be restarted, and we used to have to wait for the whole thing to cool down before processing the next batch. Before the flatbed, my normal was a batch every three or four months. Processing in batches meant you'd have to go through the lot to test the emulsion, which meant, on average, at least an hour sitting in a darkroom in front of the machine. Every time I processed a batch that had not been thoroughly cleaned, and I'm not sure I could have washed the whole thing down that sink at a hundred degrees. The point of processing is not to scan, it's to get the film developed in order to preserve the images on the film, however long that might be. Where once we might have had to deal with a couple of rolls of processed films before that dried, now we have only a few rolls to look after. When we took these photographs, we took everything that could be useful. We picked up loose film and bits of junk from our back garden. An old wire spool and a bottle of developer were in the pile. We found some film in the fridge that hadn't been developed. My husband cut it up into chunks to hold the chlorine out. I soaked it in a solution of water and baking soda to rid it of chemicals. We tipped the gunk into the kitchen bin. When we were done, we made two boxes out of it all. I keep some film too. I think it's seven or eight rolls,
